Before the invention of modern machines, people found many different ways of sending messages over long distances. The simplest was a team of runners. The first runner carried the message to a nearby village, there he gave it to a second runner who took (it) to the next village, and so on. In America in the 19th century, the messengers didn't run, they rode small horses called ponies. American Indians sent messages with smoke from fires. African tribesmen sent messages on big drums. Carrier pigeons were also used. All these systems had disadvantages. Either they took a long time, or the message had to be very simple. Samuel Morse Who invented the telegraph system changed that.
